COMPLIANCE OVERVIEW

Provided by Sullivan Benefits

Employee Leave-sharing and Donation Programs

Employer-sponsored leave-sharing programs allow employees to donate some of their accrued paid leave time, such as paid time off (PTO), vacation or sick leave, for the benefit of other employees who are in need of additional paid leave. Employer-sponsored leave-donation programs allow employees to forgo their accrued paid leave in exchange for cash donations that the employer makes to charitable organizations.

While these programs can be beneficial to both employers and employees, they need to be carefully structured in order to avoid negative tax consequences for the employees who donate their unused paid leave. The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) has issued guidance on specific types of leave-sharing and donation programs that do not trigger tax consequences for donor employees.

In addition to the tax issues, employers should be aware of other possible areas of concern when considering a leave-sharing or donation program, including the potential cost implications of these programs and privacy concerns.

HIGHLIGHTS

KEY POINTS

- Employers may establish paid leave-sharing or donation programs to allow employees to help those in need.
- Leave sharing allows employees to donate their paid leave to other employees.
- Leave donation allows employees to exchange their paid leave for charitable contributions.

TAX ISSUES

- Unless the program meets IRS guidelines, the donated leave will be taxable to the donor employees.
- The IRS has approved leave sharing for medical emergencies and major disasters.
- The IRS has approved leave donation for specific events, including Hurricanes Harvey and Irma.

This Compliance Overview is not intended to be exhaustive nor should any discussion or opinions be construed as legal advice. Readers should contact legal counsel for legal advice.

LEAVE-SHARING PROGRAMS

Employer-sponsored leave-sharing programs provide employees with the opportunity to donate their accrued PTO, vacation or sick leave for the benefit of other employees who are in need of additional paid leave time. Typically, an employer establishes a leave-sharing “bank” to track the donated employee leave. Employers should determine in advance what criteria must be met in order for an employee to use the donated leave. Employers should also require employees to submit an application to use the donated leave and implement a process for determining whether an employee’s application satisfies the program’s criteria.

Leave-sharing programs can be advantageous to both employees and employers by enhancing employee morale and camaraderie in the workplace while also reducing employee turnover and productivity losses. However, these programs must be carefully structured in order to avoid negative tax consequences for the employees who donate their accrued leave.

General Tax Rule: As a general rule, donating leave under an employer-sponsored leave-sharing program is treated as an assignment of income that is taxable to the employee who is donating the leave (that is, included in the donor employee’s wages on his or her Form W-2) and is subject to income tax and employment tax (that is, FICA and FUTA) withholding.

The IRS recognizes two types of leave-sharing programs where employees can donate their unused paid leave without incurring negative tax consequences—programs for medical emergencies and natural disasters. Under these programs, employees are not taxed on the leave that they donate to be used by their fellow employees. Rather, the donated leave is taxable to the employee who receives the leave. The donor employees may not claim a tax deduction or charitable contribution for any of the leave that they donate under one of these programs.

Leaving-sharing for Medical Emergencies

According to the IRS (Revenue Ruling 90-29), a leave-sharing program that allows donated leave to be used only for medical emergencies results in taxation to the leave recipients, and not to the leave donors. The leave-sharing arrangement that the IRS reviewed involved these main components:

- ✓ Employees requesting the additional leave are required to submit a written application describing the medical emergency to the employer.
- ✓ After the application is approved and the employee exhausts all of his or her paid leave, the employee is eligible to receive paid leave (at his or her normal rate of compensation) donated by other employees.

“Medical Emergency” Definition: Under the program considered by the IRS, a “medical emergency” was defined as a medical condition of the employee (or family member of the employee) that would require the prolonged absence of the employee from duty and would result in a substantial loss of income to the employee because the employee would have exhausted all paid leave available (apart from leave that is available under the leave-sharing plan).

- ✓ The arrangement restricts the amount of leave that can be donated and contains rules regarding how the leave will be granted to leave recipients.

The IRS concluded that amounts that the employer paid to a leave recipient under the program were includible in the recipient's gross income for federal tax purposes and also subject to income and employment tax withholdings. The IRS also cautioned that its guidance only applies to bona fide employer-sponsored leave-sharing programs.

Leave Sharing for Major Disasters

The IRS has also indicated (Notice 2006-59) that a leave-sharing program that allows donated leave to be used only for employees adversely affected by major disasters results in taxation to the leave recipients, and not to the leave donors. A "major disaster" means a major disaster that is declared by the president of the United States.

According to the IRS, a major disaster leave-sharing program is a written program that meets all of the following requirements:

The plan allows a leave donor to deposit accrued paid leave in an employer-sponsored leave bank for use by other employees who have been adversely affected by a major disaster. An employee is considered to be adversely affected by a major disaster if the disaster has caused severe hardship to the employee (or family member of the employee) that requires the employee to be absent from work.

The plan does not allow a leave donor to deposit leave for transfer to a specific leave recipient.

The amount of leave that may be donated by a leave donor in any year generally does not exceed the maximum amount of leave that an employee normally accrues during the year.

A leave recipient may receive paid leave (at his or her normal rate of compensation) from leave deposited in the leave bank. Each leave recipient must use this leave for purposes related to the major disaster.

The plan adopts a reasonable limit, based on the severity of the disaster, on the period of time after the major disaster occurs during which a leave donor may deposit the leave in the leave bank, and a leave recipient must use the leave received from the leave bank.

A leave recipient may not convert leave received under the plan to cash instead of using the leave. However, a leave recipient may use leave received under the plan to eliminate a negative balance that arose from leave that was advanced to the recipient because of the effects of the major disaster. A leave recipient also may substitute leave received under the plan for leave without pay used because of the major disaster.

The employer must make a reasonable determination, based on need, as to how much leave each approved leave recipient may receive under the leave-sharing plan.

Leave deposited on account of one major disaster may be used only by employees affected by that major disaster. Except for an amount so small as to make accounting for it unreasonable or administratively impracticable, any leave deposited under a major disaster leave-sharing plan that is not used by leave recipients by the end of the time period described above (requirement number 5), must be returned within a reasonable period of time to the leave donors (or, at the employer's option, to those leave donors who are still employed by the employer), so the donor will be able to use the leave. The amount of leave returned to each leave donor must be in the same proportion as the amount of leave donated by the leave donor bears to the total amount of leave donated on account of that major disaster.

Programs that do not meet these specific requirements may cause the donated leave to be taxable to the leave donor (and not the recipient). For example, in a private letter ruling from 2007, the IRS ruled that an employer's program that allowed leave donations for employees who experience "catastrophic casualty losses" due to a terrorist attack or natural disaster would result in taxable income to the leave donors because the program was not limited to helping employees adversely affected by a major disaster.

LEAVE-DONATION PROGRAMS

Under employer-sponsored leave-donation programs, employees can elect to forgo their accrued PTO, vacation or sick leave in exchange for cash donations that the employer makes to charitable organizations.

General Tax Rule: The same general tax rule that applies to employee leave-sharing programs also applies to these programs—the donated leave is taxable to the employee who donates it. Thus, unless an exception applies, the value of the donated leave must be reported on the donor employee's Form W-2 and is subject to income tax and employment tax withholding. However, because the value of the paid leave is donated to a charitable organization, the donor employee may claim a charitable contribution deduction for the donated amount on his or her taxes.

From time to time, the IRS recognizes limited exceptions to this general tax rule for donations that employers make to charitable organizations, as described in Section 170(c) of the Internal Revenue Code (Code), in response to specific situations. When an exception applies, the donated leave is not taxable to the donor employees. Similarly, employees who donate the leave may not claim a charitable contribution deduction with respect to the value of the donated leave that is excluded from their compensation and wages.

The IRS most recently provided tax relief for employer-sponsored leave-donation programs to aid victims of Hurricane Irma and Hurricane Harvey. The IRS also provided tax relief in response to other recent storms, as summarized below.

- Hurricane Irma and Tropical Storm Irma: IRS Notice 2017-52 provides that any cash payments that an employer makes to charitable organizations before Jan. 1, 2019, in exchange for paid leave donated by employees are not taxable to the donor employees if the payments are made to the charitable organizations for the relief of victims of Hurricane Irma and Tropical Storm Irma.
- Hurricane Harvey and Tropical Storm Harvey: IRS Notice 2017-48 provides that any cash payments that an employer makes to charitable organizations before Jan. 1, 2019, in exchange for paid leave donated by employees are not taxable to the donor employees if the payments are made to the charitable organizations for the relief of victims of Hurricane Harvey and Tropical Storm Harvey.
- Hurricane Matthew: IRS Notice 2016-69 provides that any cash payments that an employer makes to charitable organizations before Jan. 1, 2018, in exchange for paid leave donated by employees are not taxable to the donor employees if the payments are made to the charitable organizations for the relief of victims of Hurricane Matthew.
- Louisiana Storms: IRS Notice 2016-55 provides that any cash payments that an employer makes to charitable organizations before Jan. 1, 2018, in exchange for paid leave donated by employees are not taxable to the donor employees if the payments are made to the charitable organizations for the relief of victims of the Louisiana storms.

OTHER DESIGN CONSIDERATIONS

In addition to the tax issues associated with employee leave-sharing or donation programs, employers that are considering these types of programs should also take into account the following design issues:

- State Leave Laws: When structuring an employee leave-sharing or donation program, employers should also consider any state or local leave law requirements that may impact the program's design. These laws may have implications regarding an employee's right to various types of paid leave (for example, sick leave). Employers should consider consulting with legal counsel on the implications of state and local leave laws.
- Increased Costs: Employers should consider the possible cost increases associated with employee leave-sharing and donation programs. For example, if an employer has a "use-it-or-lose-it" policy for paid leave, and an employee donates leave that would otherwise have been forfeited under that policy, it will add to the employer's costs if the donated leave is used by another employee (or if the value is donated to a charitable organization). There are also cost implications if higher-paid employees use more of the donated leave time (which has been donated by lower-paid employees), and the leave is paid at the recipient employee's pay rate.

To help control costs, employers should consider their options for valuing donated leave, including an approach that values leave at the rate it is donated rather than at the rate it is used.

Under this type of approach, for example, if an employee who has an hourly rate of $30 donates two hours of paid leave, that leave is valued at $60. It would equal, for example, four hours of paid leave for an employee who makes $15 per hour, but just one hour of paid leave for an employee who has a rate of $60 per hour.

- Donation Limits: Employers often place caps on the amount of unused paid leave that can be donated and the amount of donated leave that an employee may use. These caps can help control costs, while also ensuring that donor employees still have enough paid leave for their own purposes.
- Discrimination Claims: To help avoid discrimination claims, employers should make sure that a leave-sharing program's eligibility criteria are applied uniformly to all employees in a nondiscriminatory manner.
- Privacy Concerns: Employers should also make sure that employees' privacy is protected when health or medical issues are involved. Leave-sharing and donation programs are not subject to the privacy rules under the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA). However, employers with 15 or more employees are subject to the confidentiality requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA).

Re: Prevention Bureau Permit and Fee Schedule

Dear Board Members,

We appreciate the opportunity to present an updated and modified version of the permit and inspection fee schedule. Implementing this new fee schedule will provide significant benefits to our department and the community by ensuring that our services are adequately funded and that we can continue to maintain a high standard of safety and efficiency.

The table structures outlined in the following pages detail the fee schedule per application. These tables are designed to provide clarity and transparency for all permit applicants and responsible persons.

Additionally, we have prepared a separate document that outlines our current fee schedules with proposed changes and provides a comparison with sample fire departments in the area. This document illustrates the necessity of updating our fees to align with industry standards and to support our department's ongoing operations.

We propose a phased implementation of the new fee schedule. Upon approval, the revised fees will become effective immediately for any incoming permit applications. For existing projects, the current fee schedule will apply. We will notify current business occupants within the jurisdiction of the changes at the earliest opportunity. This notification will provide the responsible parties with the necessary information and make them aware that the department intends to implement the changes applicable to them beginning January 1, 2026. We recommend this be done by mail delivery to each business currently in operation.

Thank you for your consideration,

Mifflin Township Division of Fire Prevention Bureau

Table A – Fire Alarm and Suppression Permit Fees

If a fire alarm system or automatic fire suppression system is to be installed, altered, modified, repaired, or replaced, plans shall be submitted to the fire code official which will then be reviewed. Once approved, a permit and invoice will be issued accordingly. Plan review fees apply at $75.00 per hour, with a minimum charge of one hour. The fire code official will bill for each hour spent reviewing drawings and drafting written commentary.

For new installations, the fees are charged at a flat rate based on the total square footage of the protected area. If a building is equipped with multiple systems, the fire code official has the discretion to either charge a single fee for the entire protected area or assess separate fees for each individual system.

For alterations, modifications, repairs, or replacements to existing systems, a flat rate based on the total square footage of the protected area.

Plan review fees apply at $75.00 per hour, with a minimum charge of one hour. The fire code official will bill for each hour spent reviewing drawings and drafting written commentary. Throughout the plan review and commenting process, the fire code official will identify the applicable permits for the hazardous activities. Once the review and commenting process is complete, permits will be issued, and invoices for the relevant fees will be processed.

Please note that these fees do not include any required acceptance testing, which will be invoiced separately upon completion if applicable, and can be referenced in Table D of this document.
